Accident Caused by Auto

Tuesday evening William J. Davidson and daughter, Mrs. J. J. Gettys, his mother-in-law, and Mrs. Eve Kegg, a neighbor, drove in a two-seated carriage from Friend's Cove, where they had spent the day, and stopped in front of the home of Mrs. Kegg. When all had alighted except Mrs. Gettys an auto approached without any signal and frightened the horse which dragged Mr. Davidson around in a circle a couple of times, finally striking a tree and breaking the carriage, throwing Mrs. Gettys out and bruising her considerably, which caused her to be confined to her bed for a time. Mr. Davidson, though dragged upon the ground, was not seriously injured.

A service of preparation for the Communion was held Wednesday evening with an address on "The Last Day of Jesus Christ."

Special attention is called to the evening service at 7:30. The service will be opened with a solo by Master Cloyd Doly, and will include a solo by Mrs. Landis Tanger. The sermon of the evening will be an interpretation of the crucifixion of Jesus Christ. Rev. Edward F. Reimer of Easton preaches morning and evening.

THE FOURTH AT PAVIA

Monument Dedicated—E. M. Pennell, Esq., Delivered Principal Address. The people of Union Township celebrated the Fourth of July last Saturday in a very appropriate manner.

Some time ago a movement was started to erect a monument in the cemetery at Pavia in honor of the sixteen soldiers who left their homes within the present boundaries of Union Township and served with the Union Army during the great Rebellion and sleep in Southern fields. A memorial committee was appointed who took the matter in charge and erected a beautiful monument containing the names of the dead heroes, with the company and regimental organizations to which they belonged and the place where each died, and in connection with the Fourth of July celebration this monument was dedicated.

At half past ten o'clock the citizens assembled in the village and marched to the burial ground and formed a great circle around the monument. After music by the band and appropriate hymns rendered by a local choir, the monument was unveiled by a little girl and dedicated in a prayer by Rev. Gumbert of the Reformed Church. The audience then adjourned to the church and the dedicatory address was delivered by E. M. Pennell, Esq., of Bedford. The orator dwelt upon the services and heroism of the men whose names and records appeared upon the monument and the principle for which they died, and paid a glowing compliment to members of the Grand Army Post who were present in a body, and dwelt upon the lessons to be drawn by the present generation from the lives of the men who fought in the great war. At the close of his address appropriate exercises were rendered by a number of little girls dressed in the national colors, who closed a beautiful drill by covering the veterans present with a shower of flowers. After further music by the band and the choir, O. W. Smith, editor of the Bedford Inquirer, spoke for about half an hour, dwelling upon the gratitude of the government to the soldiers, the honors paid them and describing the great National Cemetery at Arlington.

The dinner hour having been reached, the services were adjourned until half-past two o'clock, when the audience reassembled and the services were concluded by an eloquent address delivered by Prof. L. H. Hinkle of Pleasantville, who paid a glowing tribute to the women of 1861.

Altogether, it was a big day for Pavia, and everybody present enjoyed the services. This is the first monument erected in the county by any of the townships to the heroic sons who gave their lives on Southern fields for the preservation of the Union, and the memorial committee in charge of the Union Township monument deserve great credit for the successful completion of their work of love.

Alexander C. Mullin

Alexander C. Mullin died at Saxton Tuesday night, July 6, aged 47 years. Mr. Mullin was master of transportation for the Huntingdon and Broad Top Railroad for a number of years, but at the time of his death was in the wholesale feed business.

He is survived by his wife, one son Carl, and a daughter, Miss Blanche. He also leaves two sisters, Miss Blanche Mullin of Philadelphia and Mrs. A. M. Holsinger of Manassas, Va.; also one brother, H. T. Mullin of Cumberland.

READ ON WESTERN STREET CAR

Former Bedford Countian Sees Copy of Gazette and Writes Letter. Springfield, O., July 4, 1909. Editor Bedford Gazette, Bedford, Pa.

Dear Sir:—In looking at the heading of a newspaper opened up by my side in a street car yesterday I saw it was called Bedford Gazette. The sight struck me forcibly at the time and gave me a clue to what I have wished to know for a long time. I wanted to ascertain the name of the oldest newspaper published in Bedford County, from which our family emigrated to Ohio, in 1836. I had not seen a copy for more than seventy-three years. We had gone from Morrison's Cove, Franklin County, when I was five or six years of age, to Friend's Cove, Bedford County, from which we came to Ohio in 1836, but I have a distinct recollection, even now.

I was much gratified upon getting some copies of the Franklin Repository, now in its 119th year. Mr. Nevin also sent me just what I wanted to see, namely, its Centennial number, containing a large amount of matter of importance to me. I see that the Bedford Gazette has also passed its Centennial anniversary.

Please find inclosed stamps for which be so kind as to send me a late copy or two of The Gazette, and especially would I prize your late Centennial issue, if you have one to spare. Under separate cover I send you a late issue of the Eaton (Ohio) Herald, containing a letter of mine relating to the recent death of Dr. James B. Welch of this state, a native of Franklin County, Pa. I try to keep tab with those old Pennsylvanians.

I remember that Friend's Cove, Bedford County, was full of Feichts, Diehls and Kuntzes.

Yours in haste, Isaac Kay.

Fair-Mowry

Thursday, June 24, Edward Fair and Miss Sarah Mowry, both of this place, were united in marriage at the Reformed parsonage at Schellsburg by Rev. C. Gumbert. After returning to the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. S. C. Mowry, congratulations were extended by those present, after which a sumptuous wedding dinner was served. The call-thumpians had it all their own way in the evening, making all kinds of noise. Best wishes are extended to them through the medium of this paper.

New Buena Vista, July 7.

Picnic at Island Park

Last Monday Island Park was again visited by a merry crowd of ladies and gentlemen from Bedford. The day was spent in picnicking, and boating where the waters of the Raystown Branch of the Juniata flow clear and pure. The gorgeous scenery makes Island Park a most picturesque place, and an ideal spot for an outing. To add to the pleasure they waited until Mother Nature shared her soft and silvery light. Those present were: Misses Minnie, Nellie and Josephine Davidson, Sarah Moser, Emily Shires, Carrie Gardner, Lenora Armstrong, Alma May, Maud Powell, Flora Spidel, Jennie Leo and Dessie Shaffer, and Messrs. George O. Farber, James H. Irwin, Paul Shugert, Frank Walters, Clarence Shoemaker, Russell Boor and W. K. Weaver. Starlight.

G. A. R. Meeting

The regular meeting of Maj. William Watson Post, No. 332, G. A. R., of Bedford will be held on Tuesday, July 13, at 1:30 p. m. A full turn out is desired as business of importance will be transacted.

Methodist Day, Thursday, July 29, Lakemont Park, Altoona.

The annual gathering of Methodists at Lakemont Park, Altoona, falls this year on Thursday, July 29. Leading features of this reunion are exceptionally fine musical numbers, ample refreshment provisions, and addresses by the Rev. Don S. Colt, D. D., of Brooklyn, N. Y., a very eminent and inspiring preacher, and the Rev. Robert Forbes, D. D., Secretary of the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension, a strong, popular, piquant platform orator.

District Superintendent B. C. Caner is perfecting other important arrangements.

Dr. Sears will be at Bedford Wednesday, July 14, when he can be consulted on the eye, ear, nose and throat.

Cold Harbor Battlefield Commission

The Cold Harbor Battlefield Commission, consisting of Capt. P. F. Hodge, Swissvale, President; Capt. Josiah Hissong, Point, Secretary; Capt. P. D. Bricker, Jersey Shore, Treasurer; Capt. W. S. Underwood, West Chester, and Lieut. C. F. Gramlich, Philadelphia, appointed by Governor Stuart to erect a monument in honor of Batteries B and F, 1st Pa. light artillery, 2nd heavy artillery, 2nd provisional heavy artillery, 13th Pa. cavalry, 55th, 58th, 76th, 97th, 157th, 183rd, 184th, 187th, 188th, 190th and 191st Pa. infantry, all of which were engaged in the battle of Cold Harbor, on the historic field, have completed their work, and final arrangements are now being made for the dedication on Wednesday, October 20.

The appointment has given the commission a great deal of work, especially Captain Hissong, the Secretary, who has devoted more than a year to the task of locating and corresponding with surviving members of the several regiments.

The monument, which is the first to be erected by any state on the field, is said to be a handsome one.

The selection of a lady to unveil the monument was left to Captain Hissong and he has chosen Mrs. M. C. Watson, wife of Hon. M. C. Watson of Indiana, Pa., and daughter of Col. Richard White who commanded the 55th Penna. regiment. In case of her inability to be present the pleasant duty will be performed by her daughter.

Mrs. Rebecca Snyder

Mrs. Rebecca Snyder died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Joseph Barthelow in West Providence Township on Monday, June 28, of heart disease, aged 63 years, eight months and one day. She was a daughter of James Strong and was born near Everett September 27, 1845, and married William Snyder, September 26, 1872. The following children survive: Mrs. Joseph Barthelow and Ormond Snyder, of West Providence Township, and Clyde of California.

The funeral services were conducted by Revs. Van Pelt, Rinehart and Barnes, Tuesday afternoon. Interment in Everett Cemetery.

John Simons

John Simons, one of Bedford County's aged and respected citizens, died Monday morning at 3 o'clock at his residence four miles south of Centreville, aged about 80 years.

He was a carpenter by trade, and served one term as Justice of the Peace. He was married to Miss Mary A. Boor, who preceded him to the great beyond several years ago. The following children survive him: Oliver P. of Cheathaven, Webster of Cumberland, Md.; Sunday O. Prince of Everett, Elmira Lightfoot of Cumberland, Maggie Deibhaugh of Mill Creek, W. Va., and Walter S. at home.

Interment was made Wednesday forenoon at the Fellowship Cemetery, Rev. Green officiating.

A Novel Scheme

Punxsutawney, Pa., July 6—A number of Punxsutawney business men have agreed to contribute liberally towards the furnishing a home for the couple that will be married in public on the plaza, in front of the park, Wednesday, Punxsutawney Day of Old Home Week, August 22 to 28. As yet the prospective bride and groom have not applied, but there will doubtless be a couple who will respond. "First come, first served."

ACROSS THE CONTINENT

Portland, Ore.—Interesting Description of Trip—Great Variety of Scenery—Several Stop-Offs.

Portland, Ore., July 3, '09.
Editor of Gazette,
Bedford, Pa.

Being at leisure today I will write a few lines and try to give you a short description of the country and of the scenery along the route.

I left old Bedford on May 17 in company with H. D. Nelson. We spent one night in Johnstown and one day, Tuesday, in Pittsburg. Leaving there at 5 p. m. of that day, we arrived in Chicago next morning at 7:30. Wednesday we spent in the Windy City; it is time well spent by the person not in a hurry. The public parks, which the city maintains, are very beautiful and the visitor falling to include them in his tour of the city will miss a rare treat. Then her many railroads and their facilities for handling freight and passenger traffic are worth seeing, at least what you can of it. Thirty-two railroads centre there, and every day one thousand eight hundred and thirty-nine trains enter and leave her portals. She has also a fine trade through her many harbors on Lake Michigan; 13,597 ships having entered and cleared from her harbors last year. Wednesday evening at 6:30 we bade good-bye to Chicago and started north for St. Paul, reaching there over the Burlington road next morning at 7:20.

After getting a breakfast and having four hours to spare, we started on a sight-seeing tour. Here the real western scenes begin to unroll. St. Paul and Minneapolis are the twin cities of the north, they are the gateway to a territory so vast, so magnificent that I can only mention the name—the Great Northwest. They are divided from each other by the Mississippi River, but several fine steel bridges stretch their huge arms across the river and unite the two cities. Here one can spend hours viewing the magnificent scenery; the many manufactories, the public buildings and beautiful parks are well worth a visit.

Thursday, 11 a. m., found us aboard the North Coast Limited on the N. P. R. R. Now the real journey to the North Pacific Coast begins. Through Minnesota the stranger can have a view that is ever changing, wooded knolls and beautiful lakes, then comes a small town or a farm, then a larger wheat or stock ranch. This continues through North Dakota and part of the State of Montana, then the scene changes slowly and you gaze out upon the alkali plains studded here and there with sage brush and herd grass. Towns and farm houses are few and far apart, and many of the latter were uninhabited. I am told that the severe winters drive many out of this section. A few hours more and the foothills of the Rocky Mountains appear. Here a surprise well worth mentioning awaits those who have never passed over the route before. Looking out you see the snow-clad peaks and they seem to be very near, so near you are almost wanting to go to them. While the train stops at some wayside station, they may look to the stranger to be one or perhaps five miles away, but they are at least ten or perhaps fifty miles distant, due to the light and pure air, and the high altitude; in many places the snow measures from two inches to a foot in depth. As we go up higher a sight meets the eye that is indeed grand, far as one can see mystic, snow-clad peaks rear their heads in grandeur, many of them obscured by clouds drifting about their summits.

A mile east of Butte, Mont., the summit of the Rockies is reached and we drop down very quickly to the great mining and smelting city of Butte, Mont. This city, situated high up on the west side of the Rockies, has a population of about 75,000, and can boast of having the richest hill in the world, for from it countless fortunes have been taken. Here every day thousands of workmen toil and sweat hundreds of feet beneath the surface of the earth, and each day they send up hundreds of tons of copper, gold and silver ore to swell the coffers of companies for which they work. Huge smelters are located here so that they, together with the mines, employ many thousands of workmen. We reach another valley and a 127 mile ride brings us to Missoula and the wooded valleys and hillsides, another stretch of 257 miles brings us to Spokane, Wash. At this place the lumber business is carried on a large scale and the huge logs that are brought to the mills here are in themselves enough to build a large house of barn. Westward 145 miles, we reach Pasco where we cross the

TO AILING WOMEN

A Little Sound Advice Will Help Many a Sufferer in Bedford.

No woman can be healthy and well if the kidneys are sick. Poisons that pass off in the urine when the kidneys are well are retained in the body when the kidneys are sick. Kidneys and bladder get inflamed and swollen, crowding the delicate female organs nearby and sometimes displacing them. This is the true cause of many bearing-down pains, lameness, backache, sideache, etc. Uric poisoning also causes headaches, dizzy spells, languor, nervousness and rheumatic pain.

When suffering so, try Doan's Kidney Pills, the remedy that cures sick kidneys. You will get better as the kidneys get better, and health will return when the kidneys are well. Let a fellow-sufferer tell you about Doan's Kidney Pills.

Mrs. Harry Sprout, Clarence St., Hyndman, Pa., says: "I suffered from kidney trouble and was unable to obtain relief. I had the usual symptoms that accompany this complaint and it would be hard to describe the misery I endured. I was subject to chills and dizzy spells, was very nervous and suffered from headaches. Doan's Kidney Pills were finally brought to my attention and I procured a box. I improved from the first and by the time I had taken the contents of four boxes I was without a sign of kidney trouble. I have had no return of the malady since and I therefore know that Doan's Kidney Pills effected a permanent cure."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other.

July 2-2t.

Columbia River on a steel bridge, 3,000 feet in length; we are now in the Yakima Valley, where the U. S. Government has a large irrigation project under way. Through this valley are splendid farms and beautiful orchards, many of which are owned and operated by the Yakima Indians.

Now we are coming in sight of the Cascade Mountains and again the eye will never tire; for the scene changes so rapidly that a new sight presents itself at every turn. Across deep canyons, up the mountain side, on past peaks whose tops rear themselves far into the clouds, the train glides and at last, high up amidst the cedar and snow, the summit is gained. Now the train drops rapidly down and a few hours' ride brings us to the busy city of Seattle, of which I will speak in another letter. One thing will seem a wonder to the stranger on this route, and that is the size of the states through which he passes, they are empires within themselves. Two hundred fifty miles west of St. Paul we enter North Dakota, then 375 more and the Montana line is reached, 779 miles and we come to Idaho; still westward 508 miles takes us across Northern Idaho and through Central Washington to Seattle. Here also I wish to say to anyone intending to visit the Seattle Exposition, that accommodations for visitors are ample and at a price no higher than in Bedford. Now I must close but will write of Seattle, Wash., and Portland, Ore., in my next.

Respectfully,
William Adams,

Helping Home Seekers
With its characteristic enterprise The Pittsburg Dispatch is arranging to give away a fine building lot in what is known as Duquesne Annex, one of the future residence sections of the Greater Pittsburg. Besides 20 persons will be given receipts for first payments on lots. The contest has created much enthusiasm and friendly rivalry, as the many competitors are working hard to have their friends rally around themselves and The Dispatch standard. The contest is still open to all and it is not too late to enter. Some one from this section may be among the lucky.

JOYFUL RELIEF FROM CONSTIPATION

Tune Up the Liver, Regulate the Bowels and be Healthy and Happy.

There are thousands and thousands of red blooded, healthy, happy people in America today that will praise the merits of Booth's Laxative Pills. These people know what it was to suffer from constipation with its consequences, and they know that the one remedy that removed the cause and made them happy, was Booth's Laxative Pills.

Results are sure and delightful, and you'll never go back to the old, slimy cathartics after once using Booth's Laxative Pills. "Booth's Laxative Pills were used by me, and I found that I gained strength from them. As a tonic for the liver, stomach and bowels I would not ask for a better remedy."

HECKERMAN LETTERS

Correspondent Makes Visit to Historic Harper's Ferry—In West Virginia.

Harper's Ferry, W. Va., June 27. Almost or perhaps all of your readers have read and heard of Harper's Ferry, W. Va., at the confluence of the Potomac and Shenandoah rivers, 55 miles west of Washington on the B. & O. R. R.

The translation of the word Potomac into the Indian language is Daughter of the Stars. The town is named in honor of Robert Harper, a native of England, who lived in Philadelphia before he came out here in 1747. This place was then known as "the hole." He found here that one Stevens, a squatter, had preceded him and erected a cabin in 1734. Mr. Harper, we are told, afterwards bought Stevens out and erected a much more pretentious cabin. Harper died in 1782 and is buried here on what was his own land. His uncovered grave can yet be found and is pointed out to visitors.

This was a part of Virginia. A ferry was established here, hence the name Harper's Ferry. This said that it was the beautiful scenery that induced Harper to settle here.

During Washington's administration this identical spot was chosen, as the sight for a national armory because it had so many natural advantages. Nature has endowed the place far more than 10,000 other places. It is today a very popular resting place for the thousands who have learned of it, and in this respect it is much like Bedford Springs.

Maryland Heights are situated on the north and Loudoun Heights on the south, and between these two high mountains the Potomac flows. This said that high upon these rocks, where no man has as yet been able to reach, a family of hawks come regularly and build. They fly so high that there are but few of them killed, though no doubt many a woman has sworn with bated breath vengeance at these hawks because of their visits to the henneries. Wonder if any of these belonged to the family that gobbled up the foster-mother duck referred to in my former letter. Maryland Heights are 1,300 feet above the surrounding country, while the Loudoun Heights are not so high. Yet they have a marked primeval appearance. Just here the Shenandoah River flows into the Potomac, and viewing this scene from an immense rock, Thomas Jefferson once said: "This sight is worth a trip across the Atlantic." This rock has since then been named Jefferson's rock.

The "Brown Insurrection" is the event which made this town famous. On the evening of October 16, 1859, John Brown and a handful of followers (some twenty if I remember correctly) took possession of the armory, making a prisoner of the guard, and several citizens. Before daybreak the next morning the town was in a state of terror; persons were afraid to venture out, as their lives were not safe. The news reached Washington and militia from nearby posts were hurried here at once. They demanded Brown's surrender, but he refused. An attack was made on the old engine house (called John Brown's Fort) in which Brown and his few followers had fortified themselves, and they were forced to surrender. Brown and his handful of standbys were indicted, tried and convicted of treason and murder and hanged. All your school boys have sung the song, "John Brown's body, etc." This town was the scene of many noteworthy events during the Civil War and the reply, "All quiet along the Potomac" can be recalled by all the old soldiers. This said that this town and Winchester, Va., were occupied by each of the armies many more times than any other towns, Winchester having been so occupied about ninety times. Harper's Ferry has been called by tourists the "Switzerland of America" and rightly so. The scenes are grand and the walks lead into three states.

Yours truly,
M. P. Heckerman.

Charleston, W. Va., July 6, '09.

The past week has been a very trying one on Dad. I almost played out in earnest. In Washington, D. C., the mercury registered ninety-eight in the shade, and when you walked over those asphalt streets the heat was so intense that many persons, as well as animals, were overcome. In fact I was one of those, and when I came to, I was in bed in room 23 where the breeze from some four or five little windows had a chance to fan me and I had for a nurse a tall, good looking lady. After sleeping a while I got much better and was able to leave the hospital early. Since then I have not been rushing as I generally do and I expect to move slower than common; I have not been sleeping much and think that was the cause. The mountains that we cross between Covington, Va., and this place are most beautiful at this season, but they lack the show of the hills in the hard coal fields, where every bush is a laurel and when there two weeks ago, was covered with beautiful flowers. The laurel in this section seems to be of a different kind, as the flowers are single and not so bright as in Pennsylvania.

Ronceverte, on the line of the C. & O., is a town of 2,000, the county seat is out five miles and if you want to go by train, single fare is 50 cents, round trip, 75 cents. Ronceverte has a number of manufactories, most, or all, lumber. It has a great outlet up the railroad that goes to Elkins, W. Va. There is here one wholesale grocery called Greenbrier Grocery Company, managed by Mr. Slack, a prince of good fellows. When I talked biz to him he said, "Dad, what ought I to have?" You know the business here, I said, I won't suggest to you. This concern, with its salesmen, did a business of a million and a half in 1908. I venture to say that it was the wonderful personality of Mr. Slack that was injected into it that did the work.

Alderson, another nice town with a memorable sulphur spring, with water as cold as ice and as strong as the celebrated sulphur spring in Milligan's Cove, is some 20 miles from Ronceverte. Here the Merchants' Grocery Company, managed by Mr. Baer, holds the ribbons, for he is a temperance man and the superintendent of Sunday School. This town doesn't seem to have the vim of Ronceverte. Neither of them sells booze.

Next we have Hinton, W. Va., where they do sell booze and where one can see the effects of it at every turn, but there is more business transacted here in a day than in both the other towns. Here are several jobbers, a very good hotel, up-to-date in every respect, but especially so in charging. Wanted to charge me $3.50 for room and three meals. Nay, nay, said Dad, cut out the bath and make it a dollar less and I am yours etc. Here the New River Grocery Company have just completed an immense brick building and they also do a landed business; it could not be otherwise with such a man as Mr. Miller behind it. He is the soul of honor and as pleasant as they make men. When he sees me he pushes a chair out and if busy motions for Dad to be seated. Hinton is built on the hillside; they have just finished paving its principal streets and I am told that this great improvement has been done with the money received for booze.

Now, after riding several hours I am put off at this city, and I go to Hotel Ruffner, the best in the city. This city went dry July 1. I think it would have been a good idea to have continued selling booze for at least a year and taken the receipts and repaved the streets; they are miserable and the citizens ought to be ashamed to allow them as they are now. This is the capital of the state, beautifully laid out on the banks of the big Kanawha and Elk rivers. There is much business done here, though no one seems to exert himself very much, yet they get there in time, and no doubt sing:

"Why speak of the scythe and the hour glass
As the birds so long have sung?
Why should we notice how time may pass

So long as the soul is young?
Let wrinkles come and the head grow gray

It's never a cause for tears,
For Methuselah hoped and laughed no doubt

When he had nine hundred years.
Joy songs may be as gladly sung

And even in better tune,
If the heart keeps time with the proper beat,

In December as in June."

How true it all is.

Yours truly,
M. P. Heckerman.

Incidents and Impressions of a Lady in Attendance at the Meeting of the Bar Association.

No. 3

Bedford Springs, July 1, 1909.

Dear Elizabeth:—

This is the last day we are going to be here, and I am awfully sorry, because we have been having "such" a good time. I wish it would last longer or that they would have meetings oftener, but still it costs a good deal and I never can get John to be saving when he is away from home and for that matter I have a hard time making a Russel Sage of him when he is at home, but out here he is all the time giving tips to the waiters and bell boys, and the waiters are girls you know, and pretty good looking ones at that. It seems funny to be giving tips to girls and I watch John when he hands them a dime or a quarter, you know men are so thoughtless, and—

Oh! I forgot to say there is a real woman lawyer here; her name is Miss Beatty, from Pittsburgh. I noticed her for some time. She was quite tall and good looking and her dresses fitted her so well that I asked somebody who she was. "Why, don't you know?" they said, "that's a lawyer, and she's a member of the Pennsylvania Bar Association." Well, that took me. I had often heard about women lawyers, but I never thought they looked like that. She just looked like other people only she looked a little better than a good many of them. They tell me she gets big fees just like a man and argues cases, gives advice about land and things and knows all that there is in those big dull-looking books. I don't see how in the world she does it.

They have even started a newspaper here. They call it "The Narr," but I don't think much of it. It has no fashion articles in it and no department store advertisements. I always like to read the bargains. But I suppose it is the best they could do. It is too much to expect that lawyers should know everything, and they are not used to getting out newspapers.

They have music and dancing here every evening, but the most of the lawyers don't seem to be much on dancing. And I sort of pity a good many of the girls, who I know would like to dance with some of the young men, but they have to dance with each other. The young men who do dance get lots of it. It must be pretty hard for them to decide whether they ought to dance or wander around the paths in the moon light. They have got an awful fine moon over here, and the way it shines down through the trees makes even an old married woman like me feel spoony. I would just like to have walked around here such nights as these, with John, before we were married, but he doesn't seem to care about the moon any more, but sits around the porches with a crowd of the other men, smoking, and every once in a while I hear him give out one of his big laughs, pretty near as loud as a cannon cracker. I don't see why men laugh so loud at a joke, but I notice that the lawyers when they are sitting around talking are just like women. They all talk at once and they hardly even listen to what the other fellows are saying. Perhaps it is because they have to talk one at a time when they are in court.

As I told you before, this is going to be our last day and the day is pretty near over. The meeting is going to end up with a banquet this evening and they say it is going to be an awful fine affair. I am expecting to enjoy it very much. I had that dress that I wore at Mrs. Brown's party fixed up a little and I am going to wear it this evening. I think it will look all right and I will look just as good as anybody. But I must go now and get ready. I have the trunk partly packed for starting home, but, if I get time after the banquet, I will write you if I am not too tired.

Affectionately,

JANE.

P. S.

After the Banquet.

It is after twelve o'clock. We sat at the banquet for over four hours and had such a delightful time. We were seated six at a table. The ladies and gentlemen had separate tables but we were right in the banquet as much as anybody else, not merely sitting in the gallery to hear speeches. At our table there was one lady from Pittsburgh, two from Philadelphia and two from some other part of the state, and all of the ladies had on their very best. They saved their prettiest dresses for the last. Mine looked first rate and I felt just as comfortable as could be. In fact, several ladies at our table and other tables told me that it was awfully becoming. It is always so nice to know that you are well dressed. Then you can enjoy everything. Well, the dining room was beautifully decorated. The gentlemen were all in evening dress, all looking their best. There was a beautifully designed bill of fare, with all the food and all the toasts and all the music duly programed. Such a clatter of conversation, of knives and forks I have hardly ever heard. It was a mighty lively scene. After they had gone through the bill of fare, the toastmaster, Mr. Hampton Todd, the Attorney General, started the speech making. He was just lovely to look at, in his evening clothes, and such a lovely talker. He introduced the speakers, making lots of witty remarks, and the speakers contributed more wit, and it seemed so easy for them to speak that you just sat there and drank it all in with perfect enjoyment. I think speeches are just fine, especially when you feel that you are well dressed and in good company. I drank a little champagne, but the first glass made me feel flushed and I went very slow on it for fear I would spoil my complexion. You know I don't look well when I am flushed, and I remember that time at Jane Gidding's wedding when I drank three glasses and pretty near got tipsy. I bet some of the men drank a bottle apiece. I don't see how they could stand it, but it only seemed to make them a little lively, but then you know people are expected to be lively at banquets. That is what they are for. There was a tremendous lot of applause after every speech and everybody took a hearty laugh at the jokes. But, dear oh dear! I am afraid it is too much dissipation for me even if I only took one glass of champagne.

Things are lying at sixes and sevens all around the room and I must finish packing up. I don't know when I will get done and I will have to get up at seven o'clock or earlier. John is still down with the men and I don't know what time he will come home, but I know that he is in good company, and even if he does have a little too much champagne something is excusable at a bar association banquet.

Good night, dear, I will have an awful lot to tell you when I come home. Your very tired friend,

JANE.

Making Money On the Farm

II.—Maintaining Fertility

By C. V. GREGORY,
Author of "Home Course in Modern Agriculture"

Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association

NOT all lands need tile drainage, but there are none on which the problem of maintaining fertility is not an important one. Fertility of the land in its broadest sense means its ability to produce large crops.

One of the important factors influencing fertility is the amount of plant food in the soil. Ten elements, carbon, hydrogen, oxygen, calcium, magnesium, iron, sulphur, nitrogen, potassium and phosphorus, are necessary to the growth of plants. From 90 to 95 per cent of the dry matter of plants is made up of carbon, oxygen and hydrogen, which are obtained from air and water. Of the others only three, nitrogen, phosphorus and potassium, are used in such large quantities that the supply in the soil is likely to become exhausted. These three are usually spoken of as the essential plant foods.

Amount of Plant Food in Soils.
These plant foods are present in varying amounts in all soils. In many cases it is necessary to increase the supply by the use of commercial fertilizers. The real need of most soils, however, is not the addition of more of these materials, but the judicious use of those already there. It is estimated that there is enough phosphorus in the upper seven inches of soil in the Mississippi valley to raise a hundred bushels of corn to the acre every year for sixty years and enough potassium to last 600 years at the same rate. Much of this phosphorus and potassium is combined with other materials in such a form that it is unavailable for the use of the plants. One of the principal problems of the farmer, then, is to make this stored fertility available.

One of the most effective means of doing this is by keeping the soil plentifully supplied with humus. Humus is the name given to decaying organic matter in the soil. It is the humus that gives the dark, rich color to soils. It leaves that "brown streak in the furrow" that farmers have long regarded as an indication of fertility. Humus gives the soil a spongy texture and greatly increases its water holding capacity. It also makes the soil lighter and warmer. Soils which contain large amounts of humus do not bake or become cloddy easily. They are mellow and respond readily to cultivation. Humus contains considerable nitrogen and furnishes a home for bacteria, which aid in making plant food available. Certain acids are also formed in the decaying of humus that aid in making the phosphorus and potassium available. It might almost be said that the chief problem of maintaining fertility is the problem of keeping the soil supplied with humus.

Maintaining the Humus Supply.
Probably the best way of maintaining this humus supply is by the liberal use of barnyard manure. The surplus straw should be used for bedding, so as to save all the liquid portion and add to the bulk of the manure. Shredded fodder is also good for this purpose. The manure should be hauled to the land as fast as formed. When it is allowed to decay in the barnyard much of the nitrogen is lost, and rains falling upon it also wash out other elements. The manure spreader is an implement that should be found in every barnyard. The manure can be loaded direct from the stables to the spreader at almost all seasons of the year and spread in an even layer upon the field. With a spreader the manure can be made to cover twice as much ground, so that the whole farm can be gone over oftener.

While barnyard manure is undoubtedly one of the best means of maintaining fertility, it cannot always be had. Many farmers, because of their location near markets which demand certain crops, find it more profitable to supply those crops than to raise live stock. Others prefer grain farming because it is less confining. Such farmers must have some method of maintaining fertility which does not depend primarily upon manure.

The Value of Clover.
The best substitute for manure is clover. Clover supplies an abundance of nitrogen, the most rapidly used of the three essential elements. Three-fourths of the air is made up of nitrogen. Clover and other leguminous crops are able to get nitrogen from this source by means of bacteria which live on their roots. These bacteria change the nitrogen of the air into nitrates, a form in which it can be used by the plants. Fully one-third of the nitrogen collected by the clover plant is left in the soil in the roots and stubble. One crop of clover in a four year rotation will furnish nearly enough nitrogen for the remaining three crops in the rotation.

This is a much cheaper form of obtaining nitrogen than by purchasing it in commercial fertilizers at 10 to 15 cents a pound. It is much more profitable to keep the nitrogen supply fairly constant by the continued use of a rotation with legumes than to add a large amount at one time. Nitrogen in the form of nitrates is readily soluble, and every rain washes some of it out of the soil. This is not true of the other essential elements to any marked extent. Too liberal a supply of nitrogen at one time tends also to promote too rapid leaf growth at the expense of fruit or grain.

The stubble and roots of the clover, together with the cornstalks and other rubbish, will do a great deal to keep up the humus supply. In addition to this, if no manure at all is available, some humus may have to be supplied from some other source. This is especially true if the soil is naturally poor in humus. One of the simplest ways to supply this is by green manuring. This means the turning under of a green crop, such as clover, cowpeas or some other legume. This supplies both humus and nitrogen. The best time to plow under such a crop is in the fall, so that it will have time to decay before spring. A large mass of undecayed material plowed under in the spring checks the upward movement of moisture and is liable to make the land sour.

Another method of adding to the humus supply is by mowing a crop of clover about haying time and letting it lie on the ground. The second crop can be cut in the same way or used for fall feed or for seed.

"Clover Sick" Soil.
After clover has been grown for a considerable length of time, especially if much has been plowed under for green manure, the land is liable to become "clover sick." This is caused by an excess of acid in the soil. This acid can be neutralized by the application of ground limestone. Caustic or quicklime is not so good as limestone, since it burns up large quantities of humus and in general is too violent in its action. Lime has another advantage on clay soils in that it causes the particles to adhere together in larger masses, thus making the soil more porous. The usual rate of application is from twenty to forty bushels to the acre. With the application of lime, as well as with the adoption of any other new method, it is best to try it on a small scale first. Then if it proves profitable its use can be extended.

The judicious use of clover or some other legume will effectively solve the humus and nitrogen problems. There remains the question of the potassium and phosphorus supply. Clover also aids with these. The humus formed from it helps to dissolve the unavailable materials and prepare them for the use of the plant. As stated before, there is enough potassium in the upper seven inches of the average prairie soil to last 600 years under the most intensive culture and enough phosphorus for fifty years. Clover changes this seven inches into twice as many feet. Clover roots go down ten or a dozen feet or farther. Alfalfa roots go down twenty feet or more. These deep roots bring up minerals from the lower layers of soil and leave them where the shallower rooted grain crops can get them.

Making Fertility Available.
Gypsum, or land plaster, has a considerable effect in making potassium and phosphorus available. Applied at the rate of 500 or 600 pounds per acre, it will often increase crop yields considerably. It also has a beneficial effect on alkali soils. Use one or two bushels to the acre.

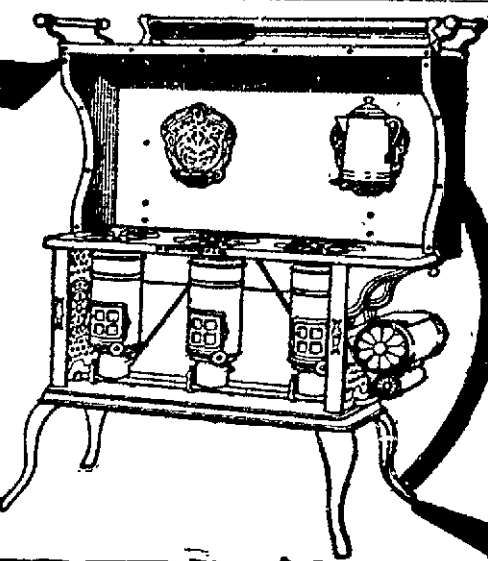

Probably the most effective way of making phosphorus, potassium or other plant foods available is by tillage. Frequent and thorough cultivation, keeping the soil fine and mellow, favors the chemical processes by which locked up plant food is made available.

It must be remembered, however, that the faster these materials are liberated the sooner will the supply become exhausted. When rotation with legumes, tillage and the application of lime and gypsum no longer produce satisfactory results it is a sign that there is a lack of potassium or phosphorus, or both, in the soil. Phosphorus is more liable to become scanty in amount since the supply is smaller. Bone meal and ground phosphate rock are the best forms in which to apply this material. The former is quicker in its action but considerably more expensive. Potassium is usually bought in the form of muriate or sulphate.

BOARD OF TRADE

A meeting of the local Board of Trade has been announced for Tuesday evening, July 13, at the Court House, and there should be a full attendance.

The organization of the Board of Trade is a move that may mean much to old Bedford. Join the organization and let it have your hearty support. Turn out and help it along.

OIL THE STREETS

An application of oil or asphalt to the streets of the town, especially the principal ones, would do away with much of the dust with which we now have to contend. If the borough funds will not permit of such a course on the part of the officials, we believe that arrangements can be made by which the business men and residents of any square can have that square oiled by subscription, thus adding to the comfort of all. Why not take the step? If some one having a team will take the matter up there is little doubt that he can secure sufficient subscriptions to enable him to oil several of the principal streets. It would add not only to the comfort but to the health of sections of the town.

NOT IN HARMONY

It is a fact that not since the birth of the American nation has there been a tariff law enacted which lacked the support of the party organs to such an extent as does the measure now in the hands of Congress.

Metropolitan journals of power and influence and of Republican faith in all sections of the nation are to be found that interpreted the tariff plank in the Republican platform to mean real revision and that, on the whole, downward. They believed it to be for the welfare of the country to have a downward revision and they, as did also the campaign speakers from Taft down, pledged to the people such revision and plead with the masses that the friends of the tariff be permitted to make the necessary changes in the schedules, hence it is no wonder they do not see things in the same light as the leaders who have had charge of the present measure. A self-respecting paper that advocates one thing during a campaign, and, with the candidates and party leaders, promises such action, cannot justify the failure to perform that duty as promised.

The electors of the nation will not always put up with the breaking of political promises, and the journals that have been opposing tariff legislation in favor of trust and combines know it full well.

WAIT, WAIT, WAIT!

There is an old adage that "all things come to those who wait," but it is not only tiresome to wait for the return of prosperity when mill wheels are silent and mines are closed and clothing is threadbare and cupboards are empty, it is positively distressing.

During the last Presidential campaign we were told to wait till Taft was elected when confidence—which surely was not destroyed by any action of Democracy—would return if Taft would be elected on a platform promising tariff revision by the friends of the tariff.

The November date came, the election was held and the result showed that enough of the voters of the nation believed the promises and pledges to place the Republican candidate in the highest office in their gift. But the long-drawn days followed without visible improvement until the inauguration, which by a second promise was to be a signal for shop doors long closed to swing on their hinges and admit eager laborers. The mill whistles did not vibrate under the power of escaping steam nor were the accumulated cobwebs over the mouths of mines cleared away.

Then came the promise of tariff revision for the benefit of the masses by a special session of Congress, which was to remove all obstacles to a speedy recovery of business. Congress met and is still in session, but the results of tariff revision to date fall far short of promises and pledges made, and the end is not yet.

WINS WITH THE NEWS

Secret of the Wonderful Success of a Great Paper.

The Philadelphia Record, now entering upon the fortieth year of its acquaintanceship with the world, seems to have won its great prestige by a stubborn refusal to be dragged away from the simplest principle of journalism. Strange as it may seem in these days of vari-colored emanations from the printing press, the Record has never been able to disabuse itself of the notion that the main duty of a newspaper is to print the news.

From its famous first page, which is patterned after by newspapers throughout the land, to the last line of its last page, the Record is always chock full of news—just simply news. Not content to carry the service of the Associated Press, which it prints more fully than any other Philadelphia paper, the Record is recognized by correspondents all over Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, and Maryland as the best buyer of special news dispatches in the State of Pennsylvania. Without trenching upon the field of small neighborhood newspapers, it carries a fuller service of countryside news than any other journal in the field. And its countryside news, as well as its dispatches from afar, has the virtue of being reliable.

WITH THE LATEST IMPROVEMENT.

And a Pair of Loving Hearts to Enjoy Them All.

By NELLE B. RANSOM.

[Copyright, 1909, by Associated Literary Press.]

Dorothy Allen sat on the broad, white pillared porch watching the road that wound between the trees to the village. She had watched the road a great deal during the last few days, at first with happy anticipation, but now with helpless longing.

It was bad enough in the daytime, but it was worse when it grew too dark to see who was coming along the road, for then the footsteps grew louder and louder until she was certain that they were going to turn toward the white pillared porch, only to die away again, leaving her sick with fresh disappointment.

On the previous Sunday evening the vague, beautiful something which had enveloped the whole summer, making it different from any other summer of Dorothy's life, had suddenly taken definite form. A look, a touch, a word or two, and she had found herself without a doubt that John Porter loved her and that she loved him, but he had gone away without any open declaration, and, though Dorothy had watched the road till her eyes ached, he had not returned.

"I might have known it," she said to herself disconsolately. "He is too proud and independent to ask the daughter of a rich man to marry him. Now that his work on the new electric road is finished he will go away, and I shall never see him again."

Dorothy's neighbor, twelve-year-old Gladys, came skipping across the lawn, a very perky pink bow topping her yellow tresses. She perched herself on the broad arm of Dorothy's chair.

"I've been reading such a lovely story!" she exclaimed.

"What was it about?" queried Dorothy, with languid interest.

"Oh, it was about a brave knight in shining armor," said Gladys, "and he loved a fair and noble lady who loved him in return. But she had gold and jewels and all that sort of thing, you know, and he hadn't a thing but his charger and his good sword, and so he could never, never ask her to marry him."

"Well," asked Dorothy as Gladys paused for breath, "what happened then?"

"Oh," replied Gladys, "there was nothing for the knight to do but to ride away to the wars, and the princess just sat in her tower and pined and pined till at last she died. Oh, it was perfectly lovely—so sad and sweet!"

"It seems to me," said Dorothy, almost crossly, "that it would have been much more sensible for the knight to stay and marry the lady instead of leaving her to pine and die."

"Why," cried Gladys in disgust, "that would have spoiled the whole story."

She jumped from her perch and was dancing down the steps, but turned to call back:

"Oh, say, that Mr. Porter has gone away, hasn't he? I saw him at the station Monday with a suit case in his hand. Aren't his eyes just too handsome for anything? I'm sorry he has left, aren't you?"

Then, having unwittingly destroyed Dorothy's last vestige of hope, Gladys cheerfully departed.

A gray haired man with a keen but kindly face came and stood in the doorway behind Dorothy, noting with an anxious look her drooping figure. He moved uneasily once or twice and then came out to where she was sitting.

"You ought to be playing golf this fine weather," he suggested.

"I'm rather tired of golf, father," replied Dorothy.

Mr. Allen took a turn up and down the porch.

"Has that young Porter left? I haven't seen him for several days," he asked, with a carefully careless air.

"I really don't know. Probably he has," replied the girl, sitting very straight and assuming an air even more carefully careless than that of her father.

Mr. Allen after a few more turns and anxious sidelong glances betook himself again to the house. Since the death of Dorothy's mother ten years before the bond of sympathy and understanding between him and his only child had grown unusually strong, but here was a situation which he felt in no wise competent to handle.

Left to herself, Dorothy's sprightly indifference suddenly vanished. Her hands fell listlessly into her lap, and she leaned her head wearily against the back of her chair. So he had gone without even coming to say goodbye! Well, there was no use watching the road any longer.

"It's just like Gladys' story," she sighed. "The knight has gone to fight his battles, leaving the poor princess in the castle to pine alone, only, being a twentieth century princess instead of a mediaeval one, I'm afraid I can't die of love. Girls never do nowadays. I suppose that's one of the modern improvements," she continued whimsically.

An endless procession of dreary years seemed to stretch out before her. She shut her eyes, and two large tears glistened on the long dark lashes.

Some one was coming across the lawn, but the footsteps made no sound on the thick turf. When they began to ascend the steps Dorothy opened her eyes with a start, and John Porter stood before her.

There was a wonderfully tender light in his eyes and a determined expression about his mouth. How handsome he looked! How tall and strong he was! Dorothy caught her breath.

"I thought you had gone away," she managed to say.

"Only down to the junction to meet the chief engineer. He wanted to talk over my next job with me. It's a little bigger than anything I've ever undertaken before. But you didn't think I'd go without seeing you again, did you, Dorothy, after Sunday night?"

"I didn't know," murmured Dorothy, her eyes on the big buckles of her colonial slippers.

John Porter seated himself on the porch rail and looked straight at Dorothy's face.

"Dorothy," he said, "I know it's the general opinion that a man has no right to ask a girl with a rich father to marry him until he can provide for her the things she has been accustomed to having, but it seems to me that if a girl really cared for a man she could be happy with him even if she had to do without some of the things she'd been used to."

"I wonder," thought Dorothy, "if it can be possible that the hero has modern improvements too."

But she kept her eyes on the big silver buckles, and John Porter continued speaking with deliberate conviction. "And that is why I dare to tell you that you can afford to give up some of the things that money can buy and come and share with me the things that can't be bought. Will you come, Dorothy?"

"Yes," said Dorothy, meeting his look squarely at last, "I will come."

Half an hour later they remembered Dorothy's father.

"He will never allow you to marry me," cried John Porter, "a common builder of roads!"

"A rising young engineer," corrected Dorothy. "Come on. I'll manage papa."

"Papa," she announced, pushing aside the portiere with one hand and drawing her lover after her with the other, "I'm going to marry Mr. Porter."

Mr. Allen roused himself from the depth of a leather chair where he had been taking an afternoon nap, started a little at the sight of the young man and looked quizzically at his daughter.

"Your prospects for doing so certainly look a little brighter than they have for the past few days," he remarked.

"Where have you been keeping yourself, Mr. Porter? Dorothy and I had about concluded that you were too busy 'doing things' to give us any attention. But, if Dorothy has made up her mind to marry you, you may as well submit first at last. Do you think you can support her?"

"Not in the style to which she has been accustomed," said John Porter. "But she is willing to dispense with luxuries."

"When I married Dorothy's mother," said Mr. Allen, "she had a little money, which I invested, and after her death I put the investment in Dorothy's name without saying anything to her about it. It's really surprising how that little sum has grown. The income from it is now quite considerable." He named a sum more than twice John Porter's salary. "I should think this, added to your present income, might provide for love in a cottage."

"With all the modern improvements!" said Dorothy softly, with shining eyes.

The Bride's Introduction.

They had been married only two weeks and were going to spend the evening with friends. They were to meet friends of their friends there. It was expected that there would necessarily be a show of dignity when the bridegroom and the bride arrived. All of the company were there and sitting around looking their sweetest when the bridegroom and the bride arrived. A bride always makes dignity essential.

It happened that the bridegroom was the particular friend of the host. The latter had never met the bride. She was coming into an entirely new circle. It was expected when the Newlyweds arrived that Mr. Newlywed would stammer and blush when he introduced Mrs. Newlywed as his wife. Not so for this boy. He sauntered in preceded by the dignified bride. Everybody in the parlor bristled up. But it wasn't to be a bristling affair at all. Mr. Newlywed simply swept around, caught the host by the arm and led him before the bride.

"Dave, meet the old lady," he said. Dignity exit. Everybody laughed and got acquainted in a hurry. The good natured introduction of the host to the bride loosened up the strings of social stress. The "old lady" found herself among friends.—Indianapolis News.

What's In a Name?

One summer a distinguished member of the French academy rented a cottage in Savoy, and when the time came for his return to Paris he went to say farewell to the owner of the cottage, a prosperous farmer's wife.

"I hope you will write your name in my album before you go," she said.

"With pleasure," he replied, and, taking a pen, he wrote his name in the book.

"Thanks," she said, "but won't you please tell me your profession, so that I can write it after your name?"

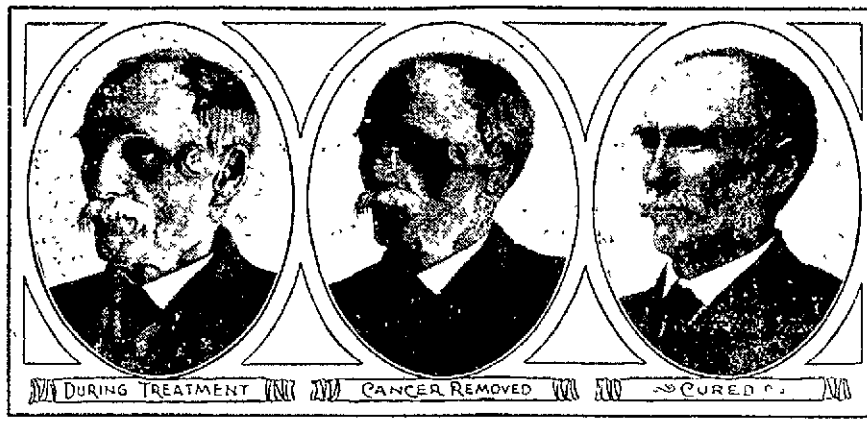

"Oh, put down 'landowner,'" he answered.

"But that isn't a profession," she said.

"Well, then, put down 'academicien,'" was his answer.

This word seemed to puzzle her, and therefore he asked, with a smile, "Don't you know what an academicien is?"

"Not quite," she answered, "but it's such a long word that the profession must be a splendid one."

TIME IS MONEY

Time and Tide wait for no man and the accurate marking of its flight oftentimes means much money, either lost or gained, by the man who has a watch he can always depend upon. The watches we carry are the makes of men who have been in the business of making watches all their life and their fathers were in the same business before them. In a word, these watches represent the acme of perfection and are built to keep accurate time all the time. They cost a little more than a Waterbury or Ingersoll, but in actual value they are cheaper. In all kinds of cases from $5 up.

BRIBERY IN RUSSIA.

An Incident of the Reign of the "Czar-Liberator."

An old and long retired Russian general, a man of the "old school," related the following story in illustration of the official bribery that prevails in Russia, the incident being one within his own personal knowledge:

During the reign of Alexander II., the "czar-liberator," the widow of a distinguished general endeavored to obtain an appointment in a certain ministry for her only son, a young man of superior education and intelligence. The minister promised the widow to reserve the first occurring vacancy in his department. She waited in vain for the fulfillment of the promise and twice repeated her appeal by letter. She learned, however, that in the meantime several vacancies had been filled by other candidates.

The widow then waited upon the emperor and told his majesty of the minister's broken promises and her own keen disappointment, and after a few moments' consideration the czar asked her if she had inclosed a gift of money to the minister with her written application.

"Why, certainly not, your majesty. I should not dare put such an affront upon his excellency."

"Do not trouble yourself about the affront, madame," replied the czar, "but renew your prostration to the minister and inclose £1,000 to him."

"But I have no such sum of money, your majesty," said the widow dolefully.

"Oh, as to that, I will lend you the money, and the minister will no doubt repay me, and you will inform me, please, of the result of your renewed application with the inclosure."

The widow sent her son to the minister with the £1,000 lent by the czar inclosed with a politely written note, the result being that the young man received the desired appointment the same day.

About a week later the minister had just concluded his customary official report to the czar when his majesty observed, "By the way, there is a very intelligent and promising young man, the son of the late General —, for whom you can perhaps find a fairly prospective position in your department."

"But, your majesty," said the minister, "that young man is already in my department, and I should say that he is likely to make a career for himself."

"Tell me, please," quietly asked the czar, "how much did this youth's mother pay you for the appointment?"

The minister was too wily and tactful outwardly to manifest his surprise and chagrin, and he knew, too, that his safety demanded a perfectly candid reply to his sovereign.

"Would your majesty be interested," he said, "to hear what I myself paid for the influence which procured my portfolio from your gracious hands? The total sum was £22,500, and, relatively speaking, I do not think, with all humility, that this lady has paid at all dearly for the prospects of her son."

The minister repaid to the czar the £1,000 and was not unkindly dismissed from the audience, and he also retained his portfolio.—Odessa Cor. London Standard.

The African Buffalo.

A wounded buffalo is vastly more dangerous when he runs away than when he charges, for in nine cases out of ten after a dash that may be for a few hundred yards or a mile he will revengingly circle back to an interception of his own trail, stand hidden in grass or thicket until his pursuer comes plodding along the trail and then charge upon him. Despite the fierce temper of a lone bull, his savage cunning and his great, charging bulk, I believe him much less dangerous than the lion, for he has far less speed, lacks the lion's poisoned claws and is a much bigger target. This opinion is substantiated by the indisputable fact that at least ten men are killed or mauled by lion to one killed by buffalo.—Edgar Beecher Bronson in Century.

Mother Love Defined.

What is maternal instinct? Is it a tangible something or is it love, the desire to protect? This wonderful mother love—what would it not do? Suns rise and set just for baby. Conversation on other subjects is tabooed in the house where a new monarch reigns. The four walls of the home are suddenly glorified with the presence of the little newcomer; the ambition of both father and mother reaches its zenith. Pleasurable pastimes we were wont to indulge in are forgotten; pursuits that filled our life, music, art, literature, things that were part of us, associated with our very name—where have they gone? All laid aside as of no moment now; in the future perhaps when "baby" is not so dependent on our every thought we will again feel their charm. Just now they might as well never have been, so completely do we give ourselves to this new life. This is maternal instinct.—Mrs. Arnold in Uncle Sam's Magazine.

Moral Support.

"You think well of Miss Scadds?" "Well, I'm conspiring to marry her." "It takes two to make a conspiracy." "I have help." "Her mother?" "No, herself."

Centreville

July 7—W. H. Rose's new bank barn, built two years ago, together with the old barn, was destroyed by fire last evening. The blaze also consumed about 30 bushels of oats, 20 bushels of rye, a quantity of corn, mowing machine, hay rake, harness, and about 1,000 feet of lumber, 500 feet worked white pine.

Two ball games were played between Lintnersville and our home team on Monday, the first resulting 5-6 in favor of the visitors, while in the second Centreville had six runs to Lintnersville's two.

Mrs. S. Bruner, after an absence of 28 years, is visiting Mr. Bruner's old home here.

Mr. and Mrs. Howard Deaner, of Hyndman, are visiting Mrs. Deaner's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Esay Rose.

Roy S. Rose of Baltimore spent a few days recently with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Rose.

Edward Miller recently fell from a cherry tree and fractured his arm at the elbow. It is a bad break and is likely to give him trouble.

Better Not Get Dyspepsia

If you can help it. Kodol prevents Dyspepsia, by effectually helping Nature to Relieve Indigestion. But don't trifle with Indigestion.

A great many people who have trifled with indigestion, have been sorry for it—when nervous or chronic dyspepsia resulted, and they have not been able to cure it.

Use Kodol and prevent having Dyspepsia. Everyone is subject to indigestion. Stomach derangement follows stomach abuse, just as naturally and just as surely as a sound and healthy stomach results upon the taking of Kodol.

When you experience sourness of stomach, belching of gas and nauseating fluid, bloated sensation, gnawing pain in the pit of the stomach, heart burn (so-called), diarrhoea, headaches, dullness or chronic tired feeling—you need Kodol. And then the quicker you take Kodol—the better. Eat what you want, let Kodol digest it.

Ordinary pepsin "dyspepsia tablets," physics, etc., are not likely to be of much benefit to you, in digestive ailments. Pepsin is only a partial digester—and physics are not digesters at all.

Kodol is a perfect digester. If you could see Kodol digesting every particle of food, of all kinds, in the glass test-tubes in our laboratories, you would know this just as well as we do.

Nature and Kodol will always cure a sick stomach—but in order to be cured, the stomach must rest. That is what Kodol does—rests the stomach, while the stomach gets well. Just as simple as A, B, C.

Governors of Pennsylvania

EDWIN SYDNEY STUART—1907.

Edwin Sydney Stuart, the present chief executive of Pennsylvania, was born in Philadelphia Dec. 28, 1853, of Scotch-Irish parentage. At the age of fourteen he obtained a position as office boy in Leary's bookstore, Philadelphia. Governor Stuart always took a lively interest in politics. He served two terms as president of the Republican State league, in 1888 and 1889. As a candidate for presidential elector in the Blaine campaign of 1884 he had the highest vote on the ticket. Four years afterward he was a delegate to the national convention which nominated Benjamin Harrison. In 1891 he was elected mayor of Philadelphia by the largest majority ever given a mayoralty candidate. He was elected governor in November, 1906.

SAMUEL WHITAKER PENNYPACKER—1903-1907.

Samuel Whitaker Pennypacker was born April 9, 1843, in Phoenixville, Chester county. Young Pennypacker early showed a thirst for knowledge and received a good education. For a time Mr. Pennypacker taught school in Montgomery county. In 1863 he enlisted, joining Company F, Twenty-sixth Pennsylvania Emergency regiment. Upon being mustered out he entered the law department of the University of Pennsylvania, was graduated in 1866 and began at once the practice of law. In 1888 he was appointed judge of the court of common pleas of Philadelphia by Governor Beaver and the same year was elected for the full term of ten years. In 1899 he was re-elected and was holding that office when chosen governor.

WILLIAM ALEXIS STONE—1899-1903.

William Alexis Stone was born on a Tioga county farm in 1816. When the civil war broke out he was too young to enlist, but, with several other boys, he ran away from home, and because of his unusual size he was permitted to enlist. His father demanded and obtained his discharge, but a few months later he became a private in Company A, One Hundred and Eighty-seventh Pennsylvania volunteers. In 1865 he was commissioned as second lieutenant. He was from 1871 to 1873 lieutenant colonel and assistant adjutant general of the Thirteenth division of the national guard. He was admitted to the bar in 1870 at Wellsboro. He took up his residence in Pittsburg in 1877 and from 1880 to 1886 was United States district attorney for the western district of Pennsylvania. He represented the Twenty-ninth district in congress from 1891 to 1899. He was elected governor in 1898 after a hard fought battle.

Lesson II.—Third Quarter, For
July 11, 1909.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Acts xvi, 16-40.
Memory Verses, 29-31—Golden Text,
Acts xvi, 31—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.]

The scene of this lesson is Philippi. The special places in the city are the prayer meeting, the prison and the home of Lydia. The principal incidents are the casting out of the evil spirit, the cruel treatment and imprisonment of Paul and Silas and the conversion of the jailer and his household. And the great workers are, as always, God and the devil. Thus the story is in greater or less measure duplicated every day until finally the devil and all his followers shall be sent to the place prepared for them and the kingdom shall be the Lord's. "Yea, all kings shall fall down before Him; all nations shall serve Him" (Ps. lxxii, 11). In whatever part of the conflict we may find ourselves we must at any cost stand wholly apart from all that is of the devil, for all that is either of God or the devil, no matter how it may look to our eyes. As the servants of God proceeded to the place of prayer a young woman met them who cried, "These men are the servants of the Most High God, who shew unto us the way of salvation," and this she did many days. Now, this was the truth that she uttered, as were also the words of the evil spirit in Mark i, 24, "Thou art the holy one of God," but Jesus would have none of this, recognizing it to be of the devil, so in the name of Jesus he commanded the evil spirit to come out of her. Good words and good works, as men judge, do not necessarily indicate the spirit of God as the one who is speaking and working. No one ever said more beautiful and wonderful words than Balaam, and yet he is associated in Jude 11 with Cain and Core, and we are taught to beware of such as he. Those who do not honor Jesus as God are not of God and therefore must be of the evil one, and yet many such are honored today as if they were truly sent of God, and to talk against them would cause possibly as great a tumult as did the casting out of this demon at Philippi. Some say we must be broad minded and acknowledge the good in all religions, but as the truth is in Jesus and not in other so called leaders we must be as narrow as Paul and as Jesus Himself, who told the religious leaders of His day that they were of the devil.

When people's gains are touched they are apt to become suddenly indignant against unrighteousness as viewed from their standpoint, as the men in our lesson did and later those at Ephesus (chapter xix, 23-29). Paul and Silas were therefore arrested, many stripes laid upon them, and they were cast into the inner prison and their feet made fast in the stocks. Where now was the "all power" of Him who sent them forth, the "power over all the power of the enemy" (Matt. xxviii, 18; Luke x, 19). As well ask the same concerning Joseph and Daniel and all others who have been permitted to suffer for His sake. Paul knew that he was called to suffer for Christ's sake, and he assures us that it is our privilege also (Acts ix, 16; Phil. i, 29). To glorify God is everything, and if we can do that best by suffering, then suffering is the way. With aching bodies and feeling that they had been shamefully treated (1 Thess. ii, 2), they prayed to God and by His grace were able to sing praises to Him so loudly that all the prisoners heard them. Like Jehoshaphat's singers, they praised the Lord before they saw deliverance (II Chron. xx, 21, 22). It is well to "bless the Lord at all times and have His praise continually in our mouth" (Ps. xxxiv, 1). Not only were they heard throughout the prison, but in heaven also, and suddenly the prison was shaken by an earthquake, all doors opened and every one's bands loosed. Some one has said that, although they had not influence enough on earth to keep them out of jail or to get them out, they had power enough from heaven to shake the prison to its very foundations. The jailer also was shaken to his very soul and would have killed himself; but finding his prisoners all safe, he is convicted of sin and, falling down before Paul and Silas, asked what he must do to be saved. Gathering his household together, they had the way of salvation set before them by these messengers of the Lord, and that night he and all his confessed Christ by baptism.

We may judge from Paul's preaching, as recorded elsewhere, just what he would tell them of the condition of all men by nature, of the grace of God in giving His Son to die for sinners, the just for the unjust; of His being made a curse for us, of His resurrection, ascension and coming again. Doubtless Paul would say, "It was to Him we prayed down there in the dungeon. His praises we sang, and in heaven He heard us and did this wonderful thing and kept you from killing yourself that you might be saved and after witnessing and suffering here for a while share with Him His kingdom and glory." To believe in to receive (John i, 12), and there and then this household received Jesus as their Saviour. What joy in heaven as well as on earth, according to Luke xv, 7, 10. It was worth while to suffer, to be unjustly and cruelly treated and imprisoned, to bring this to pass.

Indictment for Horse Stealing.

And now, a jury being called, come (names of jurors) who being duly sworn and affirmed, do say that they find the defendant guilty, in manner and form as he stands indicted. It is therefore considered by the Court that the said Daniel Palmer shall be taken tomorrow to the public whipping post and between the hours of eight and ten of the clock shall receive thirty-nine lashes, to be well laid on his bare back, and that immediately afterwards the said Daniel Palmer shall be placed in the pillory where he shall stand for one hour and have his ears cut off and nailed to the pillory, and shall forfeit to the Commonwealth the sum of fifteen pounds, being the value of the goods of Ludwig Fridline, of which the said Daniel Palmer is convicted of stealing, and shall pay the costs attending the prosecution and be committed until the whole of this sentence is complied with.—The Narr, July 2.

SARTORIAL MATTERS.

Colored Collars Are New, but Not So
Becoming as White.

The newest collar is of chiffon in the color of the bodice, finished at the top with a roll of velvet. In many cases collars of this kind surmount white yokes. The colored collar is not so becoming as the white one that we have been wearing. But everybody with a memory of the fickleness of fashion was sure that a change would soon come.

Strings serving no practical purposes are a feature in millinery. They are knotted loosely at the back or brought around to the front and tied with artistic negligence. They are frequently of black velvet.

The garment seen in the cut is suitable for a young girl or small woman, and it will be pretty used either as a separate coat or in combination with a skirt to form a costume. For either purpose serge or lightweight broadcloth will make up most satisfactorily. The coat has been designed so it can be made at home without difficulty. JUDIC CHOLLET.

FEMINE FANCIES.

A New Trimming For Summer Gowns.
The Charm of the Jabot.

Plain, coarse chain stitching that looks very much like the kind that children use to decorate their dolls' clothes is the latest freak of fashion not only for gowns, but for shirt waists. Gowns are worked in the simple stitch in braid patterns and usually in self colors. Shirt waists stamped with braid patterns are outlined with the loose, long chain stitch. Stems with coarse, solid work are also made in this way.

Nowadays it would seem that every well groomed woman wears a fluffy jabot. And there is nothing more becoming than these fluffy jabots. There is an evasive air about them that is hard to define. Their very crispness and freshness—for one of course would not think of wearing one more than once or twice at most—give a woman a well groomed air.

The waist illustrated will be pretty made from any clinging material and will be suitable for wear to complete a two piece costume. The sleeves can be finished in either leg of mutton style or in regulation shirt waist fashion. JUDIC CHOLLET.

A pattern of this waist may be had in six sizes—from 32 to 42 inches bust measure. Send 10 cents to this office, giving number 4487, and it will be promptly forwarded to you by mail.

A NATION OF SAVERS.

Frenchmen Are Thrifty and Invest in Government Bonds.

If you were a Frenchman with a very small surplus to invest, if even that surplus were but a modest franc, you might become the holder of a French government bond. From the cradle to the grave the French subject is taught to save and to turn his earnings into safe income producing account, says Charles Spear in the Review of Reviews.

The state pays a premium on thrift. It rewards its school children for various good performances with a tiny bank deposit which invariably will have grown into goodly size when the recipient has reached maturity. Having nursed its people through the early stages of economy, it directs their steps in the choice of investments and even assumes paternal power in arbitrarily transforming the savings bank account into government bonds or rentes. Thrift is a national characteristic. France is a nation of little savers, of little incomes and of little farms.

Collectively these exercise a tremendous power on the affairs of Europe. The holder of the one or two franc bond and the possessor of the bank account, so small that bankers of other countries would scorn it, have built up a monetary power that commands the respect of the world and indeed regulates the finances and politics of much more presumptuous nations. Bonds of states and governments, of railroads with a government guarantee, bonds of cities and towns, of mortgage companies, are the Frenchman's choice. It is safe to say that in Paris coupons are cut from the bonds of nearly every government under the sun.

AN INNOCENT VICTIM.

Swinburne and the Grouchy Head
Master of Eton.

Once when Algernon Charles Swinburne was traveling back with his father from school at the end of one of the terms they entered a carriage in which the then head master of Eton, who was buried in the Times, was seated.

"Isn't that Dr. —?" the admiral whispered to his son. "I believe it is," stammered young Swinburne reluctantly. After a rebuke at the apparently careless answer the admiral "accosted the awful presence" with "Dr. —, I believe, sir?" The doctor was plainly annoyed at being disturbed by a stranger. "Well, sir," pursued the admiral, "my boy here has just finished his first term at Eton, and I should very much like to know what account you can give of him." As a matter of fact, the doctor had not set eyes on young Swinburne before. "Enraged, however, I suppose," Swinburne afterward related, "at my father's rather unconventional interruption, which he had no doubt considered a slight on his dignity, he glanced down at me with a scarlet face and said deliberately, 'Your boy, sir—your boy is one of the very worst in the school,' and then intrenched himself once more behind the Times."

At Paddington there was a storm. In vain young Swinburne protested that the doctor had said what he had, out of pure vexation, but the father declared that he would take the word of the head master, and Swinburne was deprived of all pleasures and privileges for the duration of the holiday.—Dundee Advertiser.

The Lark's Song.

A writer on "The Wonders of the Spring" says that the volume of sound produced by the skylark is most wonderful. "The lark ascends until it appears no larger than a midge and can with difficulty be seen by the unaided eye, and yet every note of its song will be clearly audible to persons who are fully half a mile from the nest over which the bird utters its song. Moreover, it never ceases to sing for a moment, a feat which seems wonderful to us human beings, who find that a song of six or seven minutes in length, though interspersed with rests and pauses, is more than trying. Yet this bird will pour out a continuous song of nearly twenty minutes in length and all the time has to support itself in the air by the constant use of its wings."

THEIR NEW JUNE.

It Came With the Reunion After Both Had Suffered.

By MARIE SYLVESTRE.

[Copyright, 1909, by Associated Literary Press.]

Katherine Denton was a not unusual product of a workaday great city, yet was she an exception to her sisters. In years she was twenty-two when Dwight Sanborn first knew her, and, added to physical attractiveness was an indefinable something that reminded you of Dresden china or dainty, delicate silks—something alien to a strident, jostling world of dollars and duns.

Miss Denton was a stenographer in the law office where young Sanborn worked after graduation from the law school and where he subsequently earned a junior partnership. In the first days of apprenticeship to the law he remembered more of Browning than of Blackstone and quoted the philosopher Kant to the neglect of the legal Kent.

It was similarity in tastes that first brought the young people closer than stenographer and employer. Sanborn was dictating a petition to be filed in an action for breach of promise, and his levity evidenced his distaste of the task.

Flippantly he quoted from Mrs. Browning's immortal sonnet, which the incautious defendant had incorporated in a letter destined to be an exhibit in the case.

"I love thee with a love I seemed to lose
With my lost saints. I love thee with the breath, smiles!"

The rest escaped him.
"Smiles!" he repeated, in an effort to remember, when Miss Denton interrupted:

"Smiles, tears of all my life, and if God chooses
I shall love thee better after death."

The repetition was impersonal, of course, and the young lawyer let escape him the repressed tenseness of the tones which told of sympathy with the heart that gave the sentiment of the world and more than that for a man who could inspire it.

Sanborn laughed, thanked her for completing the quotation and finished outlining the petition. Afterward he remembered and a day or two later a daintily bound volume of the Portuguese sonnets reached Miss Denton's desk with Sanborn's card. That was the beginning.

Love came quickly to both of them and scarcely a year elapsed until Katherine Denton was Katherine Sanborn Courtship days were dreams of accomplishment and development of higher ideals they believed they wanted to realize.

But, while the woman loved and lived and dreamed, the man deteriorated to the typically masculine. He became brilliant in manipulation of the law's intricacies and was made a regularly retained counsel to a number of immense and important corporations. His days at the office were filled with the law, and the evening at home felt the dominating influence of ambition's passion.

Instead of the dreams of sweetheart days everything was subordinated to the quest for legal success. And to Katherine came the thought that even in his profession ideals had been de-throned and new gods set up for adoration and devotion, for Sanborn was at his best when piloting a corporation craft through mazes that baffled the intent of the statutes.

"I'm losing the man I married," she cried to herself in the solitude of neglected wifehood. "He's slipping, slipping, and I cannot prevent it, cannot hold him."

With disillusionment came unrest with unrest rebellion. To the woman it seemed that all that life held worth while was being taken from her. She was envied as the wife of a brilliant heard one morning in commanding tones. She started, listened again to his voice in delirium, then peeked cautiously through a half opened door.

He was hardly recognizable, this sorrow faced patient with sunken cheeks and bulging eyes. With a quick little cry of pity and love she ran to him.

"Dwight, Dwight," she sobbed, "here is Katherine! Here, dear! Don't you know me?"

"Go away! You're not Katherine. She left me. I've lost her, and I want her. God, I want her!" And tears came to his eyes, as they did to hers.

The wise old doctor permitted her to assist in the nursing, but there were times when she was rigidly excluded. The exclusion hurt her, but the doctor was inexorable, and obedience is the first requirement in a resort of the kind, so she had to obey.

It was the morning of the 1st of June. Katherine was in the room adjoining her husband when she heard him call:

"Oh, Katherine!" And there was a naturalness in the tones that indicated returned reason. She dropped the book she had to rush to him, and in his eyes were remembrance and clear understanding.

"Katherine, it was you, then. I—I thought I dreamed it."
"I'm sorry, Dwight, sorrier than I can tell you. It was all wrong, m'going away. I—I want forgiveness," she whispered.

"Forgiveness? You? Rather I should ask it. It has been hard. It seemed cruel, but perhaps it was for our good, sweetheart. The boy you used to love is coming back—coming back—coming back, sweetheart."

For a moment he lay silent, his eyes closed. Then he started.

"The birds, dearest, the birds?" he asked.

"It's the first day of June," she whispered.

"June, Katherine, June for us for all ways," he murmured sleepily as he lifted the hand that lay in his to his lips and kissed it. And like a thief he slipped into sleep sweet sleep, with an awakening to happiness and love.
